THE BUSINESS OF PERIODS

Facts are facts: Talking about periods shouldn't be taboo. The more people understand their bodies, the more they can set themselves up to make smart decisions. Knowledge is power, after all. Luckily, the truth-tellers at TAMPAX have teamed up with longtime advocate Amy Schumer to ensure that, when it comes to menstruation conversation, there are less question marks and more periods.

A LETTER FROM AMY SCHUMER

I'm so excited to be partnering with TAMPAX! We have the same goals in mind: to make period conversations as normal as periods, and close the knowledge gap to be able to learn what is happening with our bodies. I've always been an advocate for women's health, and when TAMPAX shared that there are so many myths and so much misinformation out there, I jumped at the opportunity to help set the record straight. TAMPAX is all about giving people the information they need to live their lives without limits. Enough is enough. Let's talk about it, even laugh about it, to learn more about periods.

PROVIDING EARLY EDUCATION
Medical reports begin discussing toxic shock syndrome (TSS). TAMPAX launches a TSS education campaign.

Tampon Truths

OB-GYN, Girlology co-founder and TAMPAX expert partner Dr. Melisa Holmes answers some of your most pressing period questions.

Do tampons hurt?

Tampons are perfectly comfortable when you insert them properly. If you can feel the tampon, it probably hasn't been inserted far enough into the vagina.

What shape is the vagina?

Though some people think it's round, like a tube, or curved with a narrow opening, the vagina is actually flat, like a sleeping bag. That's why TAMPAX expands to fit your unique shape.

Does using a tampon mean I'm not a virgin?

Using a tampon has no impact on whether you're a virgin. Even if you've never had sex, tampons can be safe and comfortable to use when worn correctly.

Are tampons mainly for swimming?

Tampons are ideal for literally anything. Whether you are hitting the gym, swimming or sitting on your couch, TAMPAX moves with you for on-the-go, or on-the-couch, protection.

Can you use tampons on your first period?

A lot of people think you have to use pads with your first period, but there's no reason why you can't use a tampon if you want. It's your choice! Both pads and tampons are safe.

Is toxic shock syndrome something that only women get?

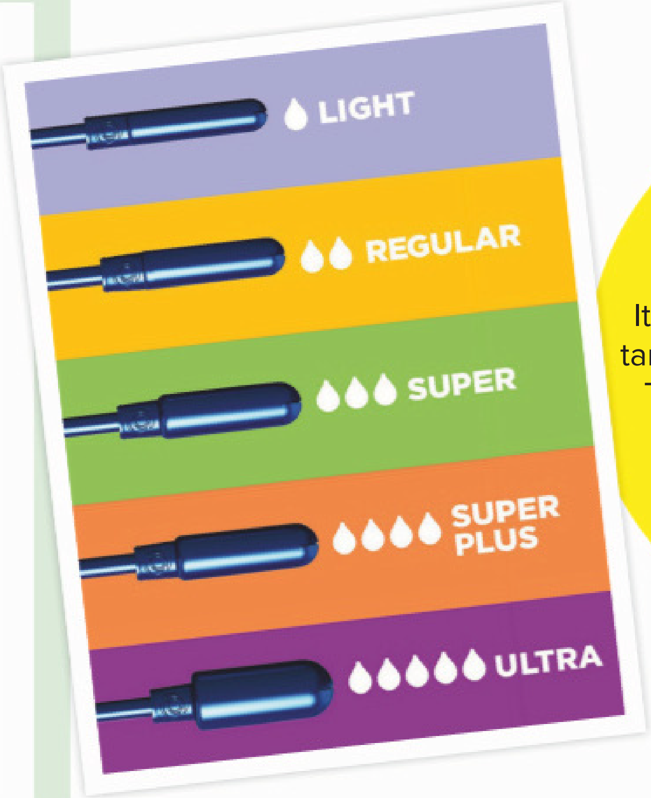
Anyone can get TSS because it's not caused by tampons, but by a specific type of bacteria that grows under certain circumstances. Even men and children can get TSS.

Can a tampon get lost inside your vagina?

No. The cervix is a barrier between the vagina and the uterus, and a tampon can not get lost.

Do TAMPAX tampons contain toxic ingredients?

The ingredients in TAMPAX tampons are safe. Before any product hits the shelves, it is carefully evaluated and tested to ensure it meets strict quality and safety standards.



WHAT TO KNOW ABOUT YOUR FLOW

It's different every day—and your tampon should be, too. Never fear! TAMPAX PEARL tampons come in five absorbencies. Mix them up throughout your period for great protection and comfort all flow long.

5 Things We're Talking About this week!

Jennifer Grey might be working on a Dirty Dancing sequel

Baby could be coming out of the corner again. Grey will star in and executive-produce an untitled new dance film set in the '90s, though she hasn't confirmed whether it'll tie into her 1987 classic.

Avocado milk arrives in the U.S.

The avocado takeover continues. A New Zealand company is bringing its nondairy alternative stateside—which should make for very colorful bowls of cereal.

Ultrarealistic cakes trend online

Are you going to eat that? Turkish bakery Red Rose Cake won followers—and inspired bakers—by disguising cakes as nonedible and not entirely appetizing items like a Crocs shoe, a roll of toilet paper and a bar of soap.

Travel down the road and back again to your new digs!

The Golden Girls house is for sale

You can live like Blanche, Dorothy, Rose and Sophia—for a mere $3 million. But the house that served as an exterior for the '80s sitcom is in L.A., not Miami, where the show took place.

Tina Turner still rocks

The 80-year-old singer released a new mix of her 1984 single "What's Love Got to Do with It" with deejay and producer Kygo—and it hit No. 1 on iTunes, proving yet again…she's simply the best.

Hayden Panettiere’s Domestic Abuse Nightmare

Finding Her Voice “She very much wants to be her own person who makes the right decisions,” a source says of Panettiere (in 2017 and, inset, on Nashville with Connie Britton). Top right: Hickerson’s February 2020 mug shot.

Hayden Panettiere is taking a stand. After the former Nashville star told authorities in California that her ex-boyfriend Brian Hickerson, 31, had been violent toward her, he was arrested on July 16 in Los Angeles on eight charges alleging abusive incidents from May 2019 to January 2020, all of which Hickerson has denied. “I am coming forward with the truth about what happened to me with the hope that my story will empower others in abusive relationships to get the help they need and deserve,” Panettiere, 30, said in a statement. “I am prepared to do my part to make sure this man never hurts anyone again.”

According to a criminal indictment, the allegations against Hickerson include four felony charges of corporal injury on a spouse/cohabitant; two felony charges of assault with a deadly weapon; a misdemeanor charge of battery on a spouse/cohabitant; and a felony charge of dissuading a witness from prosecuting a crime. Hickerson pleaded not guilty, and bail was set at $320,000; he has not responded to requests for comment.

For Panettiere, who has struggled over the past few years, speaking out is a step toward regaining control. "Hayden was finally ready to change her life for the better," says an insider. "She is now surrounded by people who care about her and not someone who tries to control her and prey on her weaknesses." The actress has been undergoing treatment for alcohol-abuse issues and has been "focused on healing, sobriety and recovery," says a source close to her, adding, "This is a turning point for her."

Panettiere, who was a child star before her breakout as a teen on the TV drama Heroes, split two years ago from former fiancé Wladimir Klitschko, with whom she shares daughter Kaya, 5 (see box). By August 2018 she was linked to Hickerson, an aspiring actor from South Carolina. But their relationship turned turbulent: Hickerson was arrested in L.A. on a charge of domestic violence against Panettiere in May 2019, but the case was dismissed when she wouldn't testify. In February Hickerson was charged with domestic battery and interference with police in Jackson, Wyo., after he allegedly punched the actress, per court documents obtained by TMZ. He pleaded not guilty.

> 'IT WAS LIKE SHE WAS UNDER A SPELL AND SHE WAS AFRAID TO SPEAK OUT. NOW SHE CAN HEAL AND MOVE ON'

Now Panettiere wants to rebuild her life. "Self-esteem and confidence work wonders on those who have been dragged down by abusive people and users," says the source close to her. "I hope those days have ended for Hayden."

—JULIE JORDAN with Linda Marx

HER PAST LOVE & HER DAUGHTER'S LIFE NOW

The actress began dating Ukrainian boxing champ Wladimir Klitschko, 44, in 2009. Though they split briefly in 2011, they rekindled their relationship and got engaged in 2013. Their daughter Kaya was born the following year, but the two never married. Amid Panettiere's recent struggles, Kaya has been living with Klitschko. "I have confidence that Hayden will land on her feet and her life will improve," says a source close to both. "She loves Kaya very much."

Tyra is in as host...

Tyra Banks is going from the runway to the ballroom. On July 15, one day after ABC announced Tom Bergeron and cohost Erin Andrews's exit from Dancing with the Stars and teased creative changes were afoot, the network revealed that the supermodel and businesswoman will be the reality competition's sole host for its 29th season. "I have been a fan of DWTS since its beginning," Banks, 46, said in a statement. "It's always transported me to my days of turning it up 10 notches on the catwalk." The former America's Next Top Model host added that Bergeron—who has hosted the series' 28 seasons since its debut in 2005—has set a "powerful stage," adding she's "excited to continue the legacy." Because of COVID-19 restrictions, however, ABC has yet to set a premiere date or provide details on how and when production will proceed.

Kim & Kanye in Crisis After Shocking Comments

Kanye West and Kim Kardashian West's marriage may have reached a breaking point following a series of troubling statements and tweets from the rapper, 43. "Kim is furious," says an insider of the reality star, 39, who was "shocked" by West's comments at a July 19 rally where he said that the couple had once considered aborting Kardashian's pregnancy with North, now 7, in 2012. "We talked about her not having this child.… She had the [abortion] pills in her hand," said West, making his first appearance since announcing his unlikely bid to run for President on July 4. "I almost killed my daughter." West, who has been open about his struggles with bipolar disorder, sobbed as he spoke about his late mother, Donda West, and stated of Kardashian: "Even if my wife were to divorce me after this speech, she brought North into this world when I did not want to."

The situation worsened the next day when West posted a series of accusations on Twitter, including that Kardashian "was trying to fly to Wyoming with a doctor to lock me up like on the movie Get Out because I cried about saving my daughters life yesterday." Reps for West and Kardashian had not commented by press time.

Talk of an impending split has swirled around the couple, who wed in 2014 and are also parents to Saint, 4, Chicago, 2, and Psalm, 1. Sources say that Kardashian and members of her famous family, including mom Kris Jenner, have struggled with how to react. "Everyone is getting more and more concerned," says the insider. "They are all very upset about how unpredictable his behavior is, and he won't listen to anyone, not even Kim." A second source says "things have broken down significantly between the two of them, and it's happened pretty suddenly. It seems really dire."

In 2018 West demonstrated similarly alarming behavior, ranting about slavery being "a choice" and lashing out at celebrity friends on social media. The following year he revealed that he had been diagnosed with bipolar disorder in 2017. "I feel a heightened connection with the universe when I'm ramping up," West told David Letterman of his manic state. "It is a health issue." Kardashian remained supportive. "She loves him and she wants him to be okay," a source said then. Now "it's clear to everyone but Kanye that he needs help," says the insider. "It's very difficult for Kim. And it's getting harder and harder to take." —AILI NAHAS with Pernilla Cedenheim and Steve Helling

Anika Noni Rose on Princess Tiana's Legacy

Since Disney announced the Splash Mountain ride at its U.S. theme parks will be reimagined with a Princess and the Frog theme, Anika Noni Rose—who voiced Princess Tiana, Disney's first Black princess, in the 2009 film—has been getting messages from fans every day. "I think it's awesome, particularly now, to be reinvigorating her story," says the Tony winner, 47.

Do people ever recognize your voice? All the time, which is surprising. I've been out and had people standing behind me say, "You're Princess Tiana." I'm like, "Oh, okay, I am."

Why is The Princess and the Frog's legacy—and the push for more onscreen diversity—so important? When we don't include children of color in fantasy, we are saying that they don't exist in that space of adventure and imagination. That can really stunt a child's joy. Surely if there is room for flying trees and talking chairs, then there's room for that child, whoever that child is.

> 'MY WHOLE LIFE I WANTED TO VOICE A DISNEY CHARACTER. TIANA WAS ABOVE AND BEYOND MY ACTUAL DREAM'

And now Halle Bailey, a young Black actress and singer, will play Ariel in the live-action Little Mermaid. I feel like because of how much people still love Tiana, people's minds were opened toward other things. Halle is a magnificent and beautiful young woman with a beautiful voice.

What elements from The Princess and the Frog do you hope to see in the new Disney ride? Great music! I know that the ride is going to continue into a Mardi Gras party. I'm hoping Louis [the film's trumpet-playing alligator] will get to play and make us laugh. It would be great if we could see an incarnation of Tiana's restaurant realized when the ride is done. —BRIANNE TRACY

Split

Danica Patrick & Aaron Rodgers

The former race-car driver, 38, and the Green Bay Packers quarterback, 36, broke up after two years of dating. They had moved in together and "loved their Malibu life," says a source, calling the split "surprising."

Divorcing

Joey Lawrence & Chandie Yawn-Nelson

What's Next for J.Lo & A-Rod!

What makes Jennifer Lopez and her fiancé, Alex Rodriguez, happy as they deal with life in lockdown? Spending time with their kids, playing with a new puppy and, for Lopez, finding time to meditate. "It really helps, getting your little bit of quiet time [amid] all that concern about the future," she says. The couple know that kind of commitment to self-care is a privilege—one they believe should be more accessible. So they've expanded their partnership with Hims & Hers—a telehealth company that offers virtual medical appointments in English and Spanish, as well as at-home COVID-19 test kits—to promote health care and self-care for everyone. "We remember what it was to grow up not being able to afford decent care," Lopez says. Rodriguez hopes the venture can help destigmatize seeking medical treatment. "It facilitates things that can be very challenging, whether that's [discussing] embarrassing issues or going to the pharmacy and waiting on line."

While the pair forge ahead with this project, their wedding plans remain paused because of the pandemic. "Putting people in danger is something that we would never want to do," says Lopez, who got engaged to Rodriguez in March 2019. But when the day comes, she says, it should be "celebratory and full of love—and free of anxiety." Meanwhile, Lopez, who turns 51 on July 24, and Rodriguez, who turns 45 three days later, are looking forward to a relaxed birthday celebration with their children: his daughters Natasha, 15, and Ella, 12, and her 12-year-old twins, Max and Emme. "Last year I celebrated my birthday for almost three months straight, while on my It's My Birthday tour. We had a birthday cake every night," says Lopez. "So if we just stay home and I get to be with Alex and the kids and watch a movie, I will be fine. We'll keep it very low-key this year." —JACKIE FIELDS

'WE'RE ALWAYS FOCUSED ON PROVIDING FOR PEOPLE WHO GREW UP THE WAY WE DID'
—JENNIFER LOPEZ

Puppy Love The blended family got a goldendoodle puppy, Tyson, in June. "[He] has brought a renewed life into the house," says Lopez (with Rodriguez and her twins, Emme and Max).

Alison Brie on Marriage and Movies

The actress, 37, stars in the new thriller The Rental, directed by her husband of three years, actor Dave Franco, 35.

What was the best part about working alongside Dave?
Getting to see the crew kind of fall in love with him because he was so collaborative and passionate. His enthusiasm on-set is infectious, and it really made me fall in love with him all over again.

In the film your character has a terrible vacation experience, but where do you love to go to get away?
Big Sur, Calif., is one of our favorite places to escape. On the drive up, I feel like my whole body relaxes.

How have you and Dave been passing the time during quarantine?
We actually wrote a rom-com script for Dave to direct and me to star in. I've also been cooking a lot, which I used to really enjoy until I was forced to have to do it every night.

Are you a big fan of horror films?
I like them, but I get very scared. I've been known to watch them on Sunday afternoons with the daylight streaming in. But Dave loves horror movies, so he'll let me know which ones are worth the scare. —MIA McNIECE

PERSONAL STORIES ABOUT GIVING BACK

Jewel at an Inspiring Children Foundation retreat in New Mexico in early March.

I grew up in an abusive home and moved out at 15. I knew that statistically kids like me end up repeating the cycle that they're raised in, and I didn't want to be a statistic. I tried living in my car, and then my car got stolen, and I became homeless at 18. I started having massive panic attacks and soon began developing tools for myself to help rewire my brain. About 18 years ago I founded the Inspiring Children Foundation to give those same tools, proven to work by neuroscientist Dr. Judson Brewer, to the most at-risk youth who don't have access to traditional support networks. We focus on mindfulness, and we also created a tennis program. Tennis is very competitive and teaches you how to refocus. When kids come through our program, we give them three main things—mindfulness skills, entrepreneurial skills and a tennis racket. We also help provide housing, food, clothing and mentoring. We are based out of Las Vegas, but we have programs throughout the U.S. Close to 1 million people have used our free online mental-health tools that can be found at jewelneverbroken.com. I realize now that my struggles were a gift, and I tell kids that because of what they've gone through, they'll be more resilient, capable and compassionate.

A Special-Needs Chicken Takes a Road Trip from California to New York

FRESNO, CALIF.

How did the chicken cross the country? In a rented RV—and it was poultry in motion. Tricia Stone-Shumaker and her husband, Scott, planned the 7,100-mile trip through 18 states as a way to travel safely during COVID-19 from their California home to the United States Military Academy at West Point for their son Forrest's graduation. They couldn't leave their pet chicken Poppy behind because the bird has a rare crossed-beak condition and needs to be fed by hand. So the couple loaded Poppy—plus dogs Beau and Tango, as well as Remington the duck—into the camper and drove east. "The duck and chicken hung out and shared a watering dish," says Tricia. Along the way they stopped at Old Faithful, Mount Rushmore and other attractions, where they took photos and posted the results to social media. "Our friends just loved it," Tricia says. "It was a great trip, and we had so much fun! We're going to do it again!"

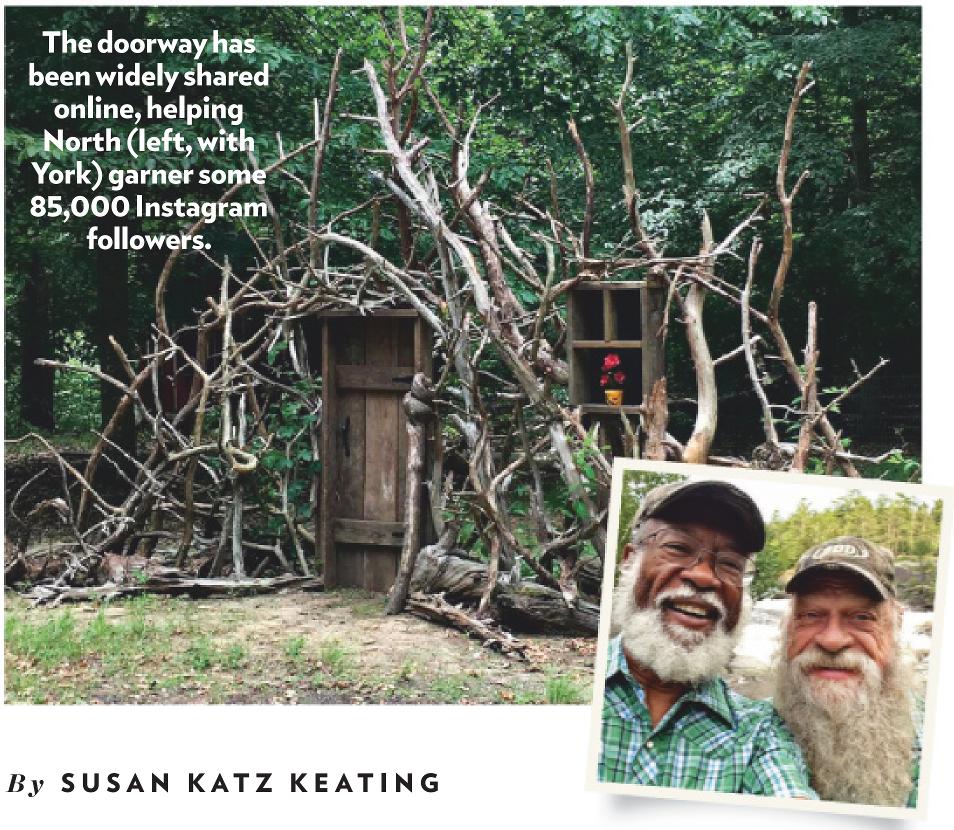
A Couple Build an Imagination Garden in Their Backyard

MARYLAND

Looking to create an escape from the stress of daily life, gospel musician David North built a doorway to imagination in his rural backyard, which he and his husband, David York, call Camp Davids. Inspired by fairy tales, the couple, who wear identical outfits every day, crafted the structure out of found tree branches, flowers and other natural items. For the summer, the doorway is surrounded by blackberry vines for harvesting and milkweed to attract butterflies. "We want to cheer people up," York says, adding that the ever-evolving project is an invitation to others to "reach into their creative places and look around themselves."



The doorway has been widely shared online, helping North (left, with York) garner some 85,000 Instagram followers.

Normal People

An extraordinary Irish romance

DRAMA The 12 half-hour episodes of Normal People, based on Sally Rooney's bestseller, are slender, elliptical and crisply understated—they come as tidily stacked as Pringles. Which is how you'll devour them. Even when you take a break from watching to do something else, you'll wonder if something new has happened with young lovers Connell and Marianne (Paul Mescal and Daisy Edgar-Jones, who has Anne Hathaway's wide-eyed vulnerability). They meet at school in Ireland's County Sligo, then continue their relationship at college in Dublin. Will they stay romantically in sync, or will some new development change and reconfigure them, leaving them like two unequal pillars in a bar chart? Normal People has sex, tears and anguish, plus moments of astonishing tenderness—in possibly the most melting scene, Connell simply kisses Marianne's hand. But it's not streaming's answer to Wuthering Heights. Connell and Marianne stumble, in a painfully modern way, on hard-to-communicate issues of shame and anxiety: Love means having to say you're sorry—a lot. (Now streaming)

LEGAL NOTICE

If You Owned or Leased a GM Vehicle that was Subject to Certain 2014 Recalls, You May Have Rights and Choices in a Proposed Settlement.

Para un aviso in español, llame a 1-877-545-0241 o visita www.GMIgnitionSwitchEconomicSettlement.com.

A proposed class settlement of economic loss claims by persons who owned or leased GM vehicles that were recalled in 2014 has been submitted for approval to the District Court. The recalls involved the ignition system, key rotation, electronic power steering and/or side airbag wiring. Plaintiffs claim that consumers overpaid when they bought or leased these vehicles. General Motors LLC ("New GM"), the Motors Liquidation Company GUC Trust ("the GUC Trust") and the Motors Liquidation Company Avoidance Action Trust ("the AAT") deny these allegations. Plaintiffs, the GUC Trust, New GM and the AAT have agreed to a settlement to avoid the risk and cost of further litigation.

Who Is Included? The proposed settlement class includes all persons (individuals, businesses and organizations) who, at any time on or before GM's announcement of the 2014 recalls, owned, purchased, or leased a vehicle subject to any of the recalls in the United States, or its territories and/or possessions. Daily rental fleet businesses, governmental entities and certain other persons are not included in the class.

What Does the Settlement Provide? If approved, a settlement fund of $121.1 million will be established. Payment amounts to eligible class members will vary depending on which recall applied to their vehicle, settlement implementation costs, and the number of eligible class members who file claims.

How Can I Get a Payment: To receive a payment, eligible class members must file a settlement claim form. All valid claims must be received online or postmarked by the claims deadline which will be posted on the website and which shall be no earlier than March 18, 2021.

Your Other Options. The Settlement will not include the release of any claims for personal injury, wrongful death or actual physical injury. However, if you want to keep your right to sue New GM, the GUC Trust and other parties about the economic loss claims you must exclude yourself from the class. If you exclude yourself, you cannot receive the benefits provided by the settlement. Your exclusion request must be postmarked by October 19, 2020. IF YOU DO NOT EXCLUDE YOURSELF AND THE SETTLEMENT IS APPROVED, YOU WILL BE BOUND BY THE RELEASE, WAIVER AND COVENANT NOT TO SUE. If you stay in the class, you may object to the settlement. Your Objection must be filed or postmarked by October 19, 2020. The District Court will hold a hearing on December 18, 2020 at 9:30 a.m. eastern to consider whether to approve both the settlement and attorneys' fees and expenses (up to a maximum of $34.5 million to be paid separately, that is, not to be deducted from the settlement fund). You may appear at the hearing, either yourself or through an attorney hired by you, but you do not have to. For more information call or visit the website below.

'We Are One Soul in Two Bodies'

MARRIED FOR 30 YEARS, THE COUPLE SHARE THEIR EXTRAORDINARY LOVE STORY—AND HOW THEY'VE GOTTEN EACH OTHER THROUGH THE MOST CHALLENGING TIME OF THEIR LIVES

By GILLIAN TELLING

In June 2019 Alex Trebek received the first happy news he'd gotten since being diagnosed with stage 4 pancreatic cancer—which has a five-year survival rate of only 9 percent—three months earlier.

He had responded incredibly well to his first round of treatment, his doctors told him: His tumors had shrunk significantly. "When you have that many people praying for you," Trebek said at the time, thanking his millions of fans for their support, "you'd be naive to deny it's made a difference."

The person praying the hardest for the longtime Jeopardy! host, then as now, was his wife, Jean, who's been by his side every step of the way. Jean, 56, "has been wonderful," says Alex, 80. In the year since that first good news, he has leaned on her more than ever. Alex—who stopped taping new episodes of Jeopardy! in April to stay at home with his family as the coronavirus epidemic halted production—has endured several more rounds of chemotherapy and immunotherapy treatments, which have left him physically and emotionally depleted. On July 15, however, he told fans that he was currently doing very well, thanks to the experimental immunotherapy his doctors have given him. Still, as he reveals in his new memoir And the Answer Is… Reflections on My Life, if the treatments stop working, he plans to discontinue them completely. At peace with his decision, he believes he would have stopped already if it weren't for his wife's love. "She's kept me alive," he says. "If it weren't for Jean, I'd have put myself out of this a long time ago."

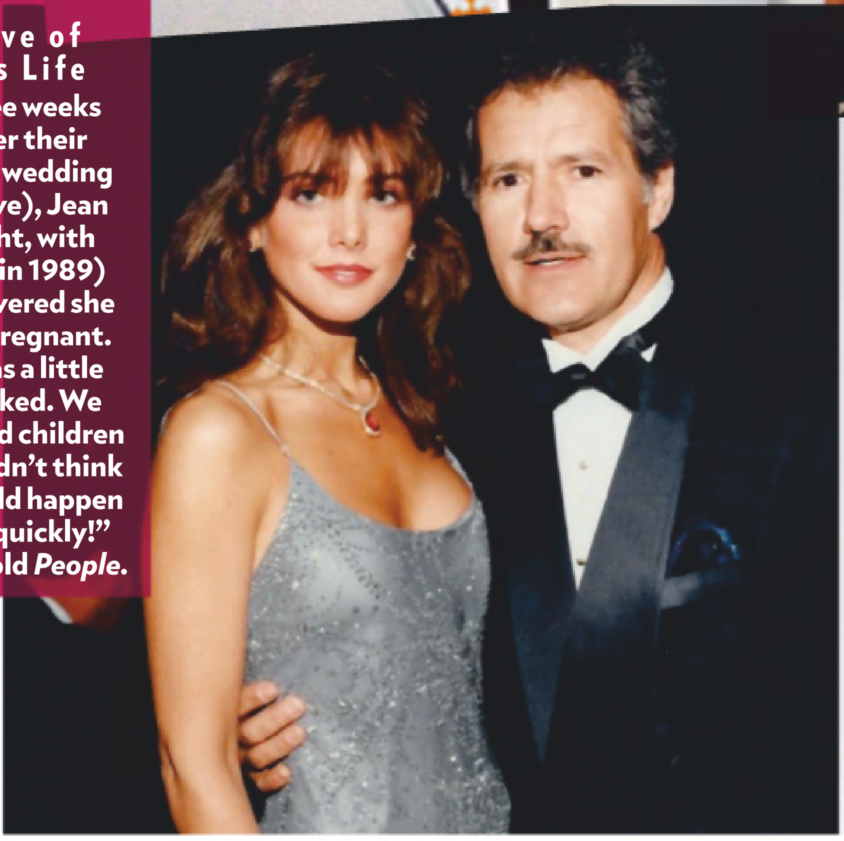
Alex and Jean, who just celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary, have an enviable love story, and he knows it. They met through a friend in 1988, when the Ontario-born Alex was 47 and had been hosting Jeopardy! for just four years. He was newly single after his divorce from his first wife, businesswoman Elaine Callei. Jean, then 23, was doing part-time bookkeeping for one of Trebek's friends while studying at Pepperdine University.



Love of His Life
Three weeks after their 1990 wedding (above), Jean (right, with Alex in 1989) discovered she was pregnant. "I was a little shocked. We wanted children but didn't think it would happen that quickly!" Alex told People.

> 'I've never heard my wife say a bad word about anybody'
> —ALEX TREBEK

"With Jean it just happened," Trebek writes in his book. "Sometimes you look at something, you look at someone, and you know. I mean, you've heard stories of people who meet and decide within half an hour; I knew this was going to be the person I'd end up with. With Jeanie that's how it was. I wasn't looking for love. But I recognized at a gut level that here was someone who was going to complete me as a human being." Yes, the tall brunette with the wide blue eyes was "drop-dead gorgeous." More important, he writes, "she was the most charming person I had ever met, not only polite but exuding a warmth that showed character and spirituality as well." At first she wasn't equally smitten. "I don't know if Jeanie was as instantly certain about me as I was about her," he writes. " I think at first she might've thought I was a bit of a jerk."

Proud Parents

"I'm so proud of my kids," says Alex (left, with young Matthew and Emily in 1996, and right, with them and Jean in 2017). "They're out on their own, surviving, accomplishing things...they're really sharp." Adds Jean: "They're compassionate, kind, sensitive people. They're our good friends."

Jean, a Long Island native, insists she did not think that—but she needed to get to know him better. "My mother knew who he was, but for me, he was just this guy I met," she says with a laugh. But she was intrigued by his intelligence and charm. "There was a deep sensitivity I picked up from him, even though he had a sort of charismatic, almost gruff exterior," she says. "I didn't care at all that he was a star. I had zero intentions about dating anyone famous. I think he liked that."

The couple began dating and soon found themselves falling in love, though they both had reservations about their 24-year age gap. "At first it worried me," Alex told People in 1990. "But then I

The Night I Proposed

I do things on whims. That's how it was with our engagement. I had just come back from doing some World Vision work in Thailand. While I was there I found a sapphire-and-diamond ring. I had no purpose in mind in buying it. But then when I got back to L.A., I decided that it would be an engagement ring. I had also picked up a little toy truck on my trip—a little bamboo truck that was about the size of a Matchbox car. I told Jeanie, "I brought you a little dinky souvenir from Thailand." She opened the package, and there was this truck. Then she opened the back of the truck, and there was this sapphire-and-diamond ring. No note. Nothing. I asked her to marry me.

Then we had to tell her parents, Carol and Eric Currivan, who were my age. I hadn't met them yet. There is a twenty-four-year age difference between Jeanie and me. I wondered how her dad would receive me. He was running a private investigation firm in New York, and he had arranged for a boat to host some family and friends for an engagement party. When Jeanie introduced me to him, he took one look at me and said, "I guess I won't be calling you 'son.'"

Jeanie's grandfather was a member of the Regency Club in Westwood. So we had the wedding there in April 1990. When the minister said, "Do you, Alex, take Jean to be your wife?" I said, "The answer is... 'Yes.'" Leave it to me, always trying to go for a laugh. And I got one. Everybody cracked up.

"I miss it very much," says Alex of the show, now on hiatus. (Above, with champion players Ken Jennings, Brad Rutter and James Holzhauer in January.) For the next month ABC is airing its best vintage episodes, with new introductions recorded by Alex.

thought, 'To hell with it. We'll make it work." Says Jean: "I remember telling my mom that I was concerned about his age. But there was just something that kept pulling me in, drawing me to him."

Two years after they first met, Trebek surprised Currivan with a 16-carat sapphire engagement ring, surrounded by six carats of diamonds. (See book excerpt in sidebar.) "It took my breath away," Jean told People at the time. "It was a rock!" They married in 1990; three weeks after the wedding Jean discovered she was pregnant with her first child, son Matthew, now 29 and living in New York City, where he co-owns the Mexican restaurant Oso. Their daughter Emily, now 26 and working in real estate in L.A., arrived two years later. (Alex is also dad to Nicky, 54, a producer on Jeopardy!, who was his first wife's daughter.)

The family fell into a comfortable life in their sprawling ranch-style house in L.A.'s Studio City neighborhood. Alex continued his work on Jeopardy!—a job he adores and has now done for 36 years. It has involved surprisingly little time away from his wife and kids. "I left home at 5:30 in the morning on Tuesdays, and I got home at 5:30 in the evening," he says. "We taped five shows back to back, a week's worth. I have a number of actor friends who are envious of my job—I only work two days a week," finalizing the shows on Wednesdays. "But it's a long schedule—46 weeks a year."

Meanwhile Jean, now the founder of insidewink.com, a website highlighting stories about kindness, raised Matthew and Emily. "It was never a big deal to the kids that their dad was Alex Trebek," she says, noting that the children's friends were rarely intimidated. "It's an everyday show in every household, and so he has that familiar type of celebrity, versus, say, Robert De Niro."

At night the self-described homebodies usually stayed in, trying out new recipes and watching old movies—and yes, sometimes Jeopardy! "We do watch Jeopardy! together, him more than me," Jean says. But it's not out of vanity. "Alex's greatest trait is that he always wants to do the best job he can," she says. "He takes his job very seriously. But he also doesn't take himself seriously. He keeps his sense of humor—and he's got a great sense of humor." During their downtime, the family traveled—Italy and England were favorite destinations—and Alex went on humanitarian visits all over the world. (See sidebar.)

Things weren't always perfect—they did sometimes bicker. "We're like most marriages," Jean says. "We have our ups and downs. We have our challenges. But we have our really beautiful times where we're just so blessed to know that we are in each other's court." ● ● ●

The Charitable Mr. Trebek

In 1984 Alex witnessed the Ethiopian famine play out on TV and felt moved to help. Soon he was donating large sums to World Vision, a humanitarian organization that sent him on relief missions all over the world—Mozambique, Thailand, Bangladesh. Later he and Jean started their own foundation, donating each year to charities they choose. (His book earnings will go to charity too.) Recently they gave $500,000 to the Hope of the Valley homeless shelter in Studio City. "They do good work," he says. "With the coronavirus having such an impact on homelessness in L.A., we increased our contribution. We've lived here 30 years. We want to foster a sense of community."

Quarantine Life
"I've been doing little projects around the house, cleaning up, getting rid of stuff," says Alex (at home with Jean) of the past four months. "I have accumulated so much stuff over the past four decades, it's hard to decide what should go! But I've got things I haven't used in 40 years."

In early 2019 the couple faced the biggest challenge of their lives when Alex learned he had cancer. This March he celebrated his one-year survival mark, a milestone only 18 percent of pancreatic-cancer patients live to see. He makes no secret of how painful and depressing the journey has been. "One day last week, I woke up and Jean said, 'How are you doing?' " he says. "I said, 'I feel like I want to die.' She was very calm, and I explained to her later, 'It has nothing to do with you. It just has to do with the fact that I feel I've become such a burden.' " Sometimes, he says, "I feel like I'm a total mess, unable to do anything positive for her. That changes my attitude."

Jean has tried her best to convince him he's anything but a burden, telling Good Morning America in January that she's tried Reiki and sound-therapy techniques on her husband. She also spreads a message of positivity on her website. "He can look at me and have a sense of 'Life is beautiful, my wife is doing something good,' " she said on GMA. Focusing on how he can help others has helped lift Alex's spirits as well. "You never have to say sorry for doing a positive deed toward someone else," he says, adding that he believes kindness is the best way to heal this divided country. "I wish we could try to resolve the divisions by extending our hands to our neighbors and helping, just saying, 'Hey, you're having a rough time. What can I do to assist you?' "

These days Alex and Jean are intensely aware of a universal truth: Love stories end. Yet Alex stresses that he has lived an incredibly happy and fulfilled life, one with few regrets. Just one, in fact: that his time with Jean couldn't have been longer. "I was thinking about George and Barbara Bush when he died, and how they'd had 73 years together," he told People last year. "I thought, 'Oh gosh, I suppose if I'd met Jean in my 20s, we could have had a longer life together.' But I guess if I'd met her in my 20s, she wouldn't have been born yet!" he added, laughing.

In his book he writes of an inspiring quote he looks at daily in his home office. "I've got [a] framed image. Jeanie gave it to me," he writes. "It's a line from our favorite movie, Wuthering Heights: "Whatever our souls are made of, yours and mine are the same." That's the way I look at our relationship. We are one soul in two bodies." ●

THE QUEEN'S GRANDDAUGHTER QUIETLY TIES THE KNOT AFTER CANCELING HER ORIGINALLY PLANNED CEREMONY AMID THE PANDEMIC

‘It felt super-romantic and lovely’

—A FRIEND

Princess Beatrice has always been close with her grandmother Queen Elizabeth. So when the coronavirus pandemic disrupted Beatrice’s original wedding plans, forcing her to postpone her May nuptials to Italian property developer Edoardo Mapelli Mozzi, the bride’s top consideration was ensuring her grandmother could still attend the rescheduled ceremony—in safe, socially distanced style. In return the 94-year-old monarch bestowed the ultimate “something borrowed” upon her granddaughter, 31: a hand-me-down dress crafted by the Queen’s own wedding-gown designer, Norman Hartnell, and the stunning Queen Mary diamond fringe tiara, the same one the Queen wore at her 1947 wedding to Prince Philip. After a last-minute change of heart about her dress, “she made a request [to borrow one from the Queen], and that was kindly granted—and it looked amazing!” says a friend of the bride and groom. “It was touching for both of them.” As for the historic tiara, “the Queen saved it specifically for Beatrice,” says a source. “They are exceptionally close.”

Their tight bond was clear at Beatrice’s surprise July 17 nuptials—even if the Queen and Prince Philip, 99, had to stand the required six feet away from the newlyweds. The intimate day was unlike any royal wedding before: With no public announcement ahead of time, there were no fans or cameras lined up as Beatrice and Mapelli Mozzi, 36, exchanged vows before fewer than 20 relatives at the Royal Chapel of All Saints in Windsor Great Park, a short drive from Windsor Castle. The couple, along with Beatrice’s mother, the Duchess of York Sarah “Fergie” Ferguson, and the British jeweler Shaun Leane designed Beatrice’s platinum-and-diamond engagement and wedding rings—a fusion of Victorian and Art Deco designs that sit seamlessly together—after a detailed consultation with the groom.

"Beatrice talks about her grandmother often, and it's clear there's a strong bond there—the dress and the tiara could not have been more perfect," says the friend.

groom's mother, Nikki Williams-Ellis, planned the revamped day in record time after the U.K. government announced that the wedding ban due to lockdown measures would be lifted in England on July 4. "They swung into action and brought it all together in two weeks, which is quite extraordinary," says the friend of the couple, noting that the Queen is imminently headed for her annual summer vacation at Balmoral. Adds another friend: "Beatrice was so excited about it all, and I think they just jumped at the chance when the ban was removed. They were both desperate for it to happen. They wanted everything to be very classic and elegant; small but refined. It felt super-romantic and lovely."

The short service featured both personal touches and current pandemic health practices: In accordance with government guidelines, no hymns were sung, but the bride's and groom's mothers read two of the couple's favorite poems, Sonnet 116 by William Shakespeare and "I Carry Your Heart with Me" by American poet E.E. Cummings. Beatrice's father, Prince Andrew, 60, walked her down the aisle. "Everyone had to be extremely cautious leading up to the big day, because the Queen was in attendance," says the source. "They had to make sure everyone who was attending was in perfect health." (Given the small guest list, Prince William and Princess Kate were not among the invitees, nor were Prince Harry and Meghan Markle.) Beatrice's sister Princess Eugenie, 30, served as matron of honor, and Mapelli Mozzi's son, 4-year-old Wolfie, whom he shares with his former girlfriend Dara Huang, an architect and designer, was best man and page boy. "He is very much part of their life," an insider previously told People. "Beatrice has embraced him as part of her life from the outset." Adds the source: "Beatrice is a wonderful and very hands-on stepmom."

Following the ceremony the bride and groom kicked off the celebrations with an outdoor party on the grounds of Royal Lodge, the shared home of Beatrice's parents, who divorced in 1996. While their original reception was planned for more than 100 guests at the Queen's Buckingham Palace gardens, around 30 people attended the scaled-down party. "A few more people were there than the wedding, but it was still very small and intimate. It was all outdoors and under a tent with the same matching floral design and theme as the wedding," the source says. Andrew, Mapelli Mozzi and the groom's stepbrother Alby Shale all gave toasts, and because live music is still banned under the current U.K. government guidelines, the couple streamed music from an iPhone to speakers set up outside. The bride and groom and their guests stayed in special glamping pods that were erected on the grounds about 100 yards from the church and partied into the night.

The low-key celebration also avoided drawing attention to the ongoing scandal surrounding Andrew, whose connection to convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein forced him to step down from royal duty in 2019. He was notably absent from the official wedding portraits, along with ex-wife Ferguson, 60, and Eugenie. "I think because of everything going on with her dad, this [scaled-down wedding] was actually better in many ways," says the friend, who notes that compared to Eugenie—whose 2018 wedding to Jack Brooksbank was a lavish affair—"Beatrice has always been more low-key. She is a little more serious and more traditional, and she would have been very conscious to do the right thing."

As they settle into newlywed life, the couple will continue to reside in London, where Beatrice works for Boston-based tech company Afiniti, which has offices around the globe. They are also planning a honeymoon at a later date. "They're terribly happy. They're besotted with each other," says a source close to the family. "They're down-to-earth and fun and have a great sense of humor. They're close to Eugenie and Jack, and it's all lovely."

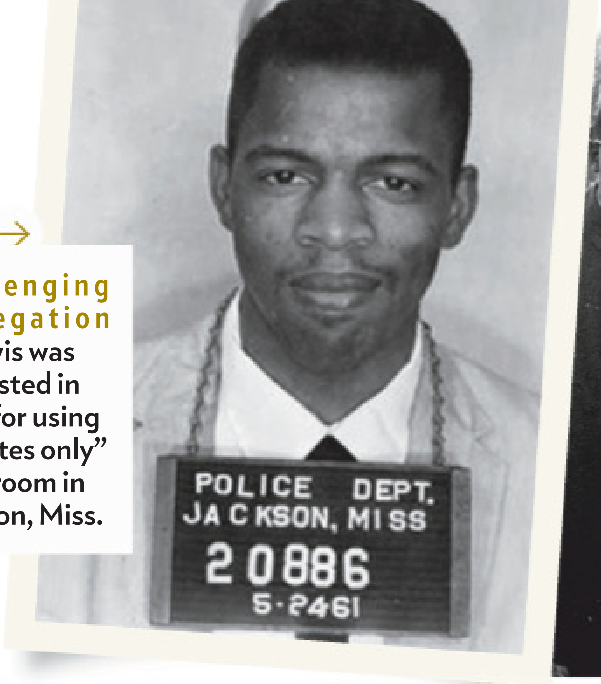
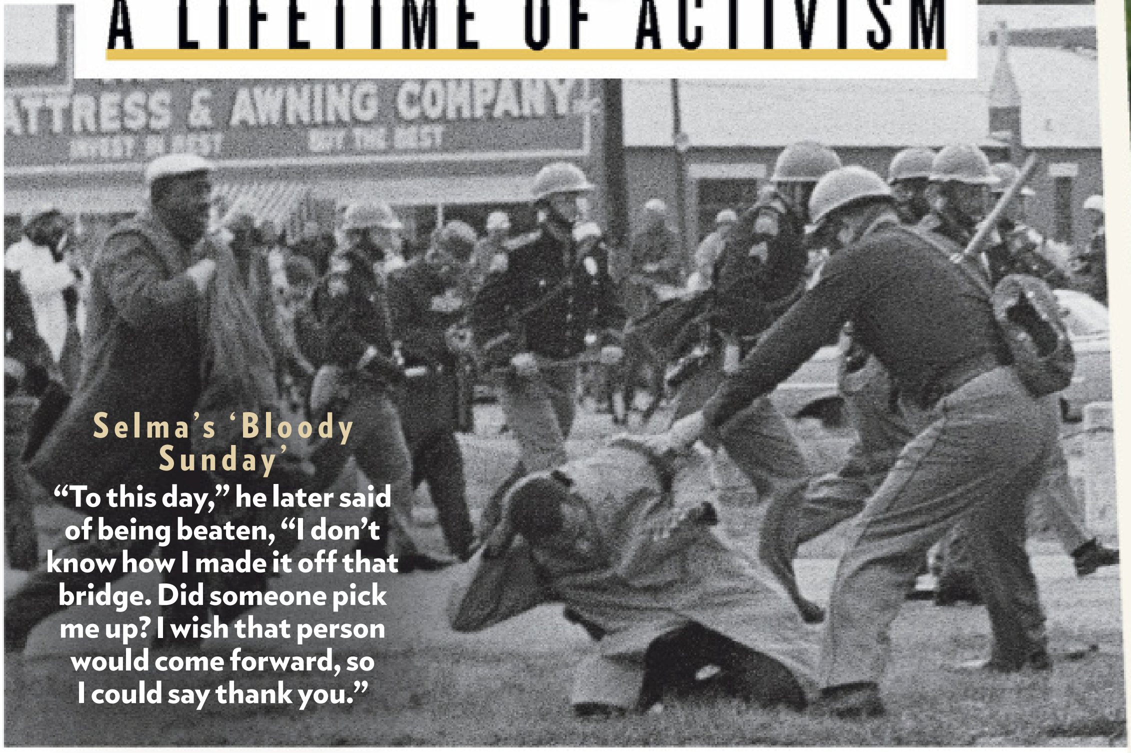
A LIFETIME OF ACTIVISM



Challenging Segregation
Lewis was arrested in 1961 for using a "whites only" restroom in Jackson, Miss.

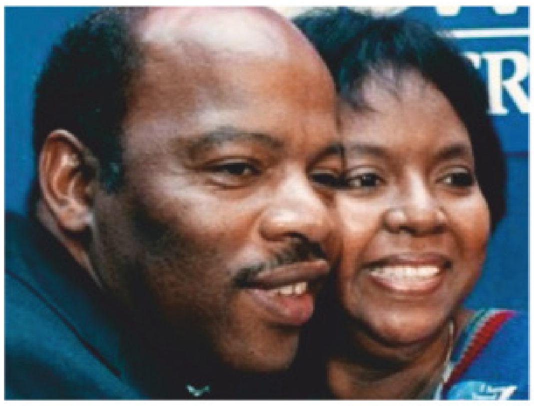


Selma's 'Bloody Sunday'
"To this day," he later said of being beaten, "I don't know how I made it off that bridge. Did someone pick me up? I wish that person would come forward, so I could say thank you."

Just weeks before his death from pancreatic cancer, Rep. John Lewis of Georgia visited the Black Lives Matter street mural outside the White House. The mural was what he called "good trouble"—peaceful, necessary protest. And the ongoing national outpouring to end racism after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis felt to him like a possible turning point, a decisive step forward from Lewis's own work on the front lines of the civil rights movement back in the 1960s. "It is so much more massive and all-inclusive," he said. "There will be no turning back."

Lewis, ranked with Martin Luther King Jr. as one of the country's civil rights pioneers, died in Atlanta at age 80 on July 17. The expressions of grief, admiration and gratitude marked the passing of a giant. President Barack Obama said that Lewis "not only gave all of himself to the cause of freedom and justice, but inspired generations that followed to try to live up to his example." Oprah Winfrey said that she had checked in with Lewis—the last surviving speaker from the 1963 March on Washington—shortly before his death. She thanked him: "My life as it is would not have been possible without you."

Lewis, widowed since the death of wife Lillian in 2012, had announced his stage 4 cancer diagnosis in December. "I have never faced a fight quite like the one I have now," he said. But he had a history of taking on seemingly impossible challenges. As a 25-year-old, Lewis had led 1965's Selma-to-Montgomery march, a protest against southern efforts to curb Black voting. As he and 600 protesters crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, Ala., white law enforcement brutally attacked the marchers. Lewis was clubbed unconscious. "I remember the clunk of the troopers' heavy boots, the whoops of rebel yells from the white onlookers," he said. "Horses' hooves hitting the pavement, women and children crying and hollering, the voice of a woman shouting, 'Get 'em! Get the n-----s!'" Rather than be taken to the hospital, he gave a rallying speech at a church. Within months President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965. (In the days after Lewis's death, a petition to rename the bridge in his honor gained nearly half a million signatures.)



His Great Love
He married Lillian, a former Peace Corps volunteer, in 1968. Lewis, she once said, "doesn't have anger."

A man for whom civil rights required—and got—"total, unquestioning commitment," Lewis was involved in everything from lunch-counter sit-ins to the Freedom Rides. He was arrested at least 45 times, including five times while serving as a congressman. In the March on Washington, at which King gave his "I have a dream" speech, Lewis told the roaring crowd, "We want our freedom, and we want it now!"

'I still believe we shall overcome'

The son of a sharecropper in rural Alabama, Lewis grew up with nine siblings in a house with neither running water nor electricity. This was the segregated South, where a bookish, studious boy like Lewis could be denied a library card. He would write in his 1998 memoir Walking with the Wind that his Black neighbors lived in fear of "being beaten up or coming up missing." Dreaming of becoming a minister—he even preached to the family's chickens—he found direction for his life's work while only 15: He cited as his greatest inspirations Rosa Parks, arrested in Montgomery, Ala., in 1955 for refusing to give up her bus seat to a white passenger, and Martin Luther King Jr., who organized a boycott following her arrest and became Lewis's mentor and friend. "I knew then," Lewis recalled, "that Dr. King was speaking to me and for me."

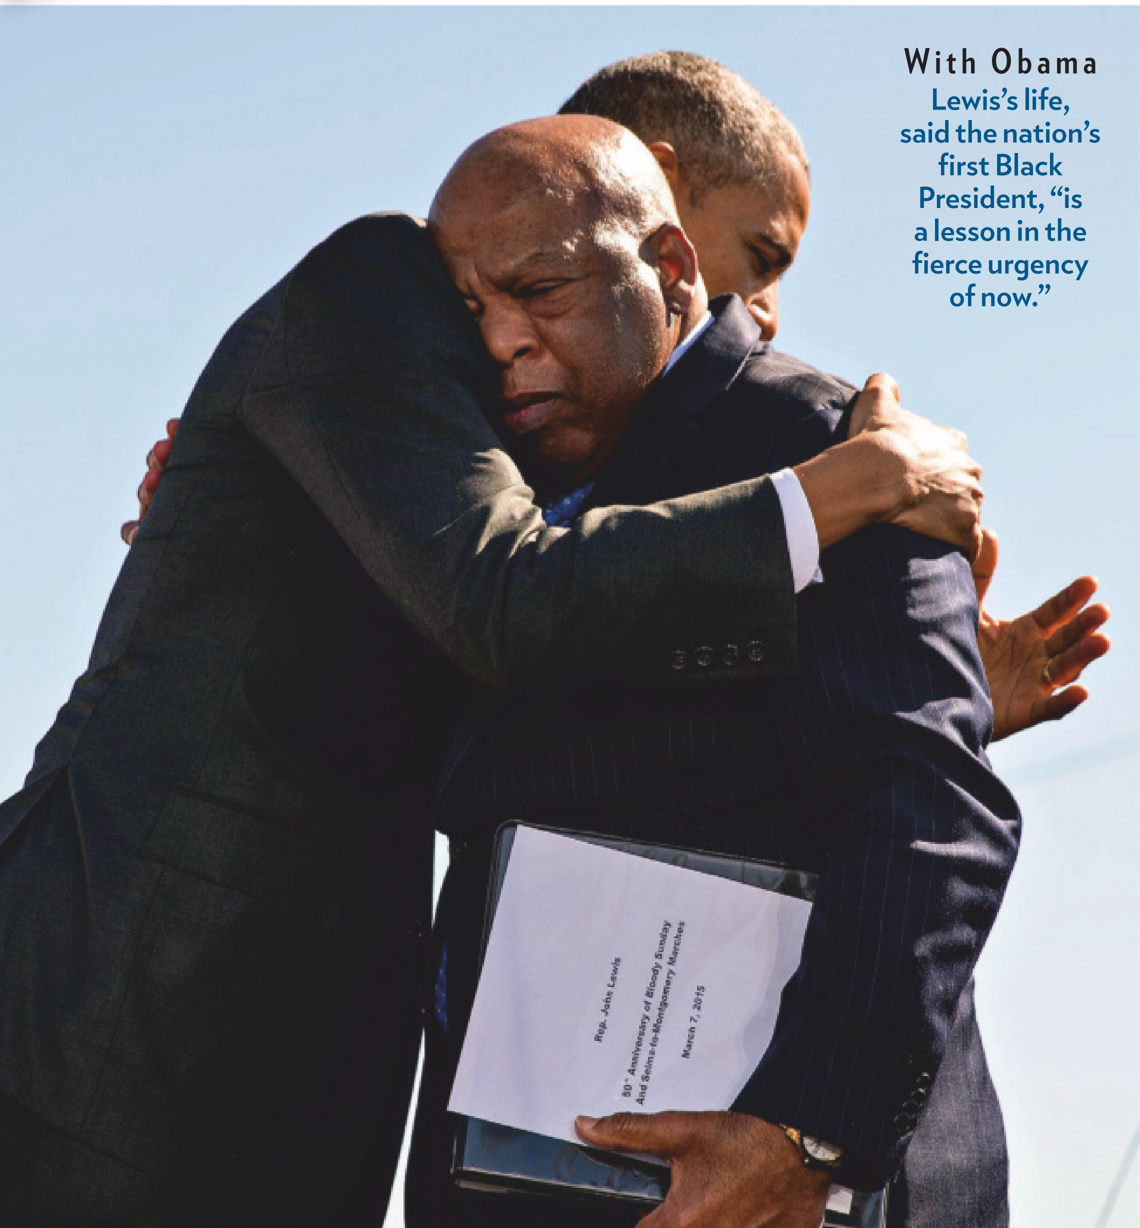
King's Example
King (marching with Lewis in Memphis 1966) "inspired me," said Lewis. "He lifted me."

Never Forget
In 2015 Lewis was joined by Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama to mark the 50th anniversary of the Selma-to-Montgomery march.

Conscience of Congress
In 2013 he was arrested protesting for immigration reform.

In Memory of George Floyd
Wearing a mask, he visited the Black Lives Matter street mural with D.C. mayor Muriel Bowser on June 7. He said the footage of Floyd's death made him cry.



Rep. John Lewis
50th Anniversary of Bloody Sunday And Selma-to-Montgomery Marches
March 7, 2015

With Obama
Lewis's life, said the nation's first Black President, "is a lesson in the fierce urgency of now."

In the years after King's assassination in 1968, Lewis was troubled as many civil rights leaders turned away from King's strategy of nonviolence. "I felt abandoned, cast out," he said. He found a new political channel beginning in 1986—winning election to the U.S. House of Representatives from Georgia's fifth district, where he served for 17 terms and was known as "the conscience of Congress." "In the halls of the Capitol," said Nancy Pelosi, Speaker of the House, "he was fearless in his pursuit of a more perfect union."

A resolute yet retiring man, Lewis had been devoted to Lillian (with whom he adopted a son, John-Miles Lewis, in 1976). "Even before I met him, I knew what he stood for," Lillian told People in 1998. "He was brave and principled, but I was taken with his shyness."

The bravery and principles are what Americans will always treasure. In Good Trouble, a new documentary about his life—it's available to stream—he faces the camera alone at the end and tells the audience, "There may be some setbacks, some delays. But as a nation and as a people we will get there.... I still believe we shall overcome." ●

Not every couple can be together 24/7, but Blake Shelton and Gwen Stefani wouldn't have it any other way. Over the last several months during the coronavirus pandemic, the entertainers have been holed up with loved ones—including Stefani's kids Kingston, 14, Zuma, 11, and Apollo, 6—at the country singer's cherished ranch in Tishomingo, Okla. "The simple pleasure of being together in one place for an extended period of time has been a real gift," says Shelton, 44, who will soon be heading back to Los Angeles with Stefani, 50, to shoot the upcoming season of NBC's The Voice with fellow coaches Kelly Clarkson and John Legend. "We cook, we clean, we ride four-wheelers and just enjoy being with each other and with family." And with their new duet "Happy Anywhere" (out now), the couple—who are gearing up to celebrate their fifth anniversary in November—are sharing their bliss with fans. Here, the singer opens up about shooting their down-home music video while social distancing, reuniting with his Voice family and falling more in love with Stefani every day.

> 'She is the most understanding person I've ever met'
> —BLAKE SHELTON, ON GWEN STEFANI

"Happy Anywhere" is all about the fact that it's who you're with that makes you happy, not where you are. How has that come into play in your own life, being an Oklahoma boy in love with a California girl?
Like you said, an Okie boy and a California girl look on paper like an unlikely match, but what matters is she's a great human being. She's the most understanding, kindhearted person I've ever met. I learn something from her every day.

This is your fourth duet together. What made you want to have Gwen sing on this song?
Well, "Nobody but You" was a big song for us, but we actually recorded "Happy Anywhere" before that. We were waiting for the right time to release it, and I knew that time was now. We're all still socially distancing, so there's no better time to be happy anywhere with the person or people you love. It doesn't matter where in the world you are. As long as you're with them, you're happy.

What was the most fun part about shooting this video together while in quarantine?
The video is just our life. There was a camera shooting the things we do every day. We make biscuits, we fish, we sing together, spend time with family . . . just a day in life!

What are you most looking forward to about getting back to L.A. to shoot the next season of The Voice together?
There's nothing like the in-person camaraderie with the other coaches, and it's more fun to give them crap in that live setting. You make a lot of friends on-set, and I'm looking forward to getting back to that big extended family. ●

Life with Gwen's Boys
On May 26 Stefani (below, with Kingston, Shelton, Apollo and Zuma in April 2019) marked Kingston's 14th birthday with a touching tribute—and a video showing Shelton showering her oldest son with kisses. "Thank u God for making me HIS MAMMA," she wrote on Instagram.

Where Is Suzanne Morphew?

VANISHED... ON

THE WIFE AND MOM OF TWO DISAPPEARED WHILE OUT ON A SOLITARY BIKE RIDE

WITHOUT A TRACE
Suzanne Morphew (inset), a fitness enthusiast, took her bike to the popular hiking trails near her home in the Colorado Rockies.

TWO MONTHS AGO. SHE'S STILL MISSING By SANDRA SOBIERAJ WESTFALL

MOTHER'S DAY

The Morphew family—Barry, Suzanne and their daughters Mallory and Macy—seemed to do everything together, whether it was church gatherings, social functions at the Chaffee County (Colo.) fire department, where Barry volunteered, moose hunting or even the weeklong Antler Rendezvous convention, where Barry would sell the elk and white-tailed deer antlers he collected. Says longtime friend Jeff Iles: "They're close—a good, model family."

But on May 10, 2020—Mother's Day—Suzanne was home alone. With Barry reportedly 142 miles away in Denver and their daughters off on a camping trip, the perpetually sunny and youthful (to friends who exclaimed "You never age," the 49-year-old would credit God: "So blessed by Him!") Suzanne set out on her bike, ostensibly to make the most of her "me" time, pedaling the forested foothills of the Colorado Rockies near the family's Salida home. She has not been seen—or heard from—since.

As the missing posters and ribbons that went up around town in May grow faded and tattered, locals now worry that hope for the Morphew family to be whole again may also be fading. On July 9 the Chaffee County sheriff's office announced that the local, state and federal investigators who have followed up on more than 600 tips and conducted "countless" interviews since Suzanne disappeared had again searched the family property—but they have not announced any new findings. "This case remains very active, as more than a dozen investigators are aggressively working this case on a daily basis," Chaffee County sheriff John Spezze says.

A Family Torn Apart

The Morphews (from left, Macy, Suzanne, Barry and Mallory) "were always very close-knit," says Bertram.

Mallory (far right, with Macy and Suzanne) hunted with her dad. "Barry always wanted a boy," says Iles.

"You see her smiling? None of it's fake. She was always happy," says Iles of Suzanne (with Barry).

"And until we determine what happened to Suzanne, we can't discount any scenario or formally eliminate anyone from suspicion."

Though authorities found Suzanne's bike that same Sunday she disappeared, they have publicly announced turning up only one unspecified "personal item" of Suzanne's despite extensive searching with drones, tracking dogs and swift water rescue teams. The "personal item," police say, was found May 14 during a search of rural County Road 225 and Highway 50 near the family's $1.5 million home. "We are trying to remain optimistic and hopeful," says local fire chief Robert Bertram, "for her safe return."

Seven days after Suzanne vanished, Barry, 52, who runs a landscaping business in Salida, posted to Facebook a videotaped plea to Suzanne and any presumed kidnapper: "However much they want, I will do whatever it takes to get you back. Honey, I love you. I want you back so bad." Says Bertram, explaining that Barry took leave from his work at the fire department: "He was having a difficult time, for obvious reasons. No appetite, didn't want to eat, didn't want to sit still, just wanting to do something—but it's kind of a hopeless feeling."

On May 22 investigators from the sheriff's office,

FBI TIP LINE:719-312-7530
VIDEO COURTESTY OF THE MORPHEW FAMILY

A HUSBAND'S PLEA
"I'll do whatever it takes," Barry said in a May 17 video (above). He put up a $100,000 reward, which a friend doubled, for Suzanne's return.

Colorado Bureau of Investigation and FBI swarmed a residential construction site near Salida where Barry had previously been hired to lay dirt, according to local news reports. Investigators combed the property for three days and "were unable to make any connection" to Suzanne's disappearance, Spezze said. The sheriff's statement specified that the unidentified property owner was cooperative and not a suspect. The sheriff then asked residents to save all video footage captured on security cameras between May 8 and May 12. "The community cares enough that people want to help," says Hanna Shea, who described watching law enforcement canvas the town with flyers on the one-month anniversary of Suzanne's disappearance. "They want to bring her home."

Meanwhile, a $200,000 reward—$100,000 offered by Barry that was later doubled by an anonymous family friend—for Suzanne's safe return sits unclaimed. "I consider Barry one of my best friends," says Iles, an Indiana firefighter who worked for Barry part-time and whose family went to the same church as the Morphews before they left Arcadia, Ind., for Colorado in 2018. "I want Suzanne to be found. I want the cops to cover all the angles—and, obviously, get Barry cleared—so they can start looking for the guy that did it."

Before this tragedy, Barry and Suzanne were something of an ideal love story to their friends. Margaret Miller Bray remembers pointing Suzanne out to Barry in the hallway of Alexandria-Monroe (Ind.) High School when he was a senior—a "gorgeous" and popular athlete who, according to Iles, went on to play briefly for the Toronto Blue Jays' farm team—and Suzanne was a freshman. "I took him over to the freshman lockers and said, 'Hey, look! She's really pretty,'" says Bray. "She had a heart that was just as beautiful." By the time Iles met the couple around 2010, Barry had built a successful landscaping business in Arcadia, and he and Suzanne were raising their girls. "You would never know they made really good money. Barry was always covered in dirt; Suzanne taught Sunday school," says Iles. "And Mallory went hunting with her dad all the time. That good family structure where the husband loves being the provider and the wife loves being the homemaker—they fit that to a T."

'PERFECT COUPLE'
Barry and Suzanne "loved" their traditional provider-homemaker roles, says Iles. "They literally built off each other."

Back in Salida, friends of the family continue to pray for answers. In June Shea and other residents put fresh teal and yellow ribbons up around town—"yellow as a symbol of hope and homecoming; teal as the color of her bike helmet," Shea says. Even though she doesn't know the Morphews, she felt compelled to help. "The more this case is on top of people's minds," she says, "the more hope we have that Suzanne will be brought home safely."

CYNTHIA KUDJI-SYLVESTER ALWAYS KNEW SHE WANTED TO GO TO MEDICAL SCHOOL AND BECOME A DOCTOR. THIS YEAR SHE EARNED HER DEGREE AND BEGAN HER RESIDENCY—ALONGSIDE HER DAUGHTER JASMINE KUDJI By CAITLIN KEATING

Dr. Cynthia Kudji-Sylvester still remembers the moment in 1989, during a trip to Ghana—the West African country her family left when she was just 2—when a woman carrying a baby approached her and frantically asked for help. “She was talking about her daughter who was sick and had a fever,” recalls Cynthia, then just 17. “She picked us just because we were American. There was such a drastic divide between us, and that really hit home. It was in that moment that I knew I wanted to be a physician.”

It would take another 31 years for Cynthia to fulfill her dream—a destiny she would share with her own daughter Jasmine Kudji, now 26. This past year mother and daughter both graduated from medical school—and began their residencies together on July 1, at the Louisiana State University School of Medicine. “Jasmine has always been my rock,” says Cynthia, 49, who graduated from the University of Medicine and Health Sciences on the Caribbean island of St. Kitts and is pursuing family medicine. “We’re in this together.” Adds Jasmine, who attended medical school at LSU School of Medicine and is interested in general surgery: “My mom always inspired me to be everything that I wanted to be. I watched her overcome things firsthand.”

> —DR. CYNTHIA KUDJI-SYLVESTER

Growing up in Slidell, La., Cynthia was encouraged by her family (her father was a NASA mechanical engineer, her mother a substitute teacher) to pursue an education. But when she became pregnant with Jasmine during her senior year at Tulane University, she put her plans for medical school on hold—instead becoming a nursing assistant and working her way up to nurse practitioner. With help from her family, Cynthia, who raised Jasmine as a single mom, saved up enough money to go to medical school in 2013. “I knew it was time,” she says. “Every disappointment, every accomplishment made me want to push further and create a better life for my daughter.” By then Jasmine was a junior in college at LSU and had already decided to follow in her mother's footsteps—even though she admits she struggled with math and science. "But Mom really supported me," she says.

These days, with Cynthia (who married Mark Sylvester, 50, a military IT assistant administrator, last June) in residency at LSU School of Medicine's branch in Lafayette and Jasmine at its medical center in New Orleans, the two manage the 135-mile distance between them through FaceTime and daily texts. "Going through medical school at the same time has made our relationship that much closer," says Cynthia, who recalls the first time she walked through the ER doors as a resident and saw the nurses' station. "I remember being a nurse, looking at the residents and saying, 'One day I would love to do that.'" Adds Jasmine: "It's been a long journey, but we really have accomplished something significant." ●

A BOND OF LOVE AND SUPPORT

"We always say we pray together, study together, laugh together, cry together," says Cynthia (left, with baby Jasmine, and right, at her 2006 graduation as a family nurse practitioner at Loyola University in New Orleans, with Jasmine).

Music, Marriage & Finding Myself

AFTER A RELENTLESS DECADE, THE SINGER OPENS UP ABOUT COPING WITH ANXIETY AND MAKING BIG CHANGES IN HER LIFE

By MELODY CHIU

Photographs by CHARLIE GRAY

New Life, New Outlook
"I still have the fire and passion for music, but I've used this time to further myself and grow," says Goulding (photographed in Oxford, England, on July 6).

TOP AND TROUSERS: TOD'S

Ellie Goulding knew she had to hit pause. After wrapping up her nearly two-year-long Delirium World Tour in 2017, "I realized I had not for a second stopped to think about who I'd become," says the 33-year-old singer, who first broke through in 2010 with her debut album, Lights. Over the last 10 years, she's played Glastonbury and Lollapalooza, nabbed a Grammy nomination for her runaway hit "Love Me Like You Do" and sold out arenas. "I was a nonstop train, and it was just 'Go, go, go,'" says Goulding, who's been open about battling anxiety and suffering from panic attacks. "The idea of making more music was too overwhelming." Goulding, who was raised in a small village near Herefordshire, England, moved from London to New York City for a couple of years, purposely fading into the background. "It was quite nice to have that escape and be in my own kind of world for a bit," she says. During that time she fell for Caspar Jopling, 28, a Yorkshire, England-born art dealer she wed last August. But while she's a blissful newlywed, Goulding says her emotionally honest new album Brightest Blue was inspired by her personal journey of self-discovery. "I've had time to think about my weaknesses and flaws but also my strengths and powers," she says. "I'm still a little bit insecure, but I've got more love for myself than ever." Here she reflects on life, love and digging deeper.

We're in the middle of a pandemic, and many are looking inward during this time. How does it feel to be putting out an album now?

It's being released in a strange time. There's no doubt about that. When I listened to it the other night, I was kind of taken aback by how relevant the lyrics are right now. It does have this sense of finding love for yourself, which I think a lot of us have had to do. This is a time of confrontation, whether we like it or not. It's confronting our discomforts, and I'm really glad I had the time after the tour to unravel everything. One thing I hadn't really confronted was that I was now a woman. I'd gone from signing a record deal at 20 to touring nonstop for 10 years, and now I'm 33.

How did you feel about leaving your 20s behind?

Twenties were just a disaster in so many ways. I had these relationships at the time that were everything. A couple years later, I'm like, "Why did I waste their time and mine by thinking it was something more than it was?" I clearly really needed that comfort and someone to be there for me. When I think back to some of the parties and people I was with, I'm like, "What the hell were you doing?" It's like a whole other girl. I always joke I'm getting old or I've got wrinkles, but I feel like I've had this time to mourn my 20s. Now I'm in a much better place and grateful for that.

A lot of people expected your next album to be all rainbows and butterflies because you're a newlywed. Did you purposely do the opposite?

I don't think when you get married that your life is suddenly just all about your husband. We got married because we knew we were going to be together forever. It wasn't like, "Oh my God, we must profess our love for each other in this way!"

Fairy-Tale Wedding

Surrounded by family and friends—including Princesses Eugenie and Beatrice, Katy Perry and Sienna Miller—Goulding and Jopling (inset, in February) said "I do" in York, England, on Aug. 31, 2019. "It was the best day and so much fun," says Goulding, who wore a '70s-inspired custom Chloé wedding gown. "A lot of people came to cheer us on and support us. It was really sweet."

10 Years of Stardom

"I would always feel like this shy girl," says Goulding (onstage in London two months before releasing her debut album).

2019
Goulding surprised fans at Coachella. "The live stuff is what I treasure."

Brightest Blue
"I reflected on the hard times and the good times," she says of her new album, available now.

Happy & Healthy

"Exercise is amazing for mental health," says Goulding, who fends off stress and anxiety with boxing, running and HIIT sessions like Barry's Bootcamp. "The gym is still male-dominated, and boxing is still a male sport, so I post [videos] to try and inspire people."

Now nothing's changed, and it feels just normal. People assume when you get married, everything changes, and I don't think it really does.

From the photos it almost looked like you had a royal wedding. Did it feel that way?

We married at York Minster [the cathedral in York, England], where my husband's family has ties. We had a teeny, tiny announcement in the York Minster weekly leaflet, but all these people turned up. My dad started having a panic attack when we drove through the city! [Seeing all the fans] was so unexpected but so lovely.

You've been outspoken over the last few years about your struggle with anxiety. Were you worried at first about opening up?

I was a bit because I always retained a bit of mystery about myself and my personal life, but it got to a point where I thought it was incredibly important to share my experiences and be honest about my ups and downs. I've definitely prioritized my mental health. So long as I'm in a good place, I am the most productive, the most creative and I feel like I treat people better. I care about my friends and family and the people around me, but I also have to make sure that I prioritize myself.

Many female artists have been speaking out about the pressures they've faced in the music industry to look or sound a certain way. Have you experienced that?

I played a lot of festivals with male-fronted bands and male artists, so I naturally thought, "Oh, I haven't had a hard time," because I've been on those lineups with all those men. But it's much deeper than that, and the music industry has been very male-dominated. I didn't realize how much that affected my work. In the early days when I started, I didn't think there was much wrong with what I had to put up with, but now I think, "That was really f---ed up." I've been really conscious now to have an all-female team, because I realized how much it made a difference to explain things—what I'm going through, where a song comes from, why I don't want to release that song—to a woman than to a man. It's so important to never let anyone tell you you're saying too much or you're ungrateful.

How does it feel being back in the spotlight?

I've been happy. I've learned things about myself that I perhaps would never have learned in the world I was in, with touring and working as hard as I did. I hope that when I do go back on tour, I go back with a new lease on life, knowing about myself and being able to use that for good. ●

A Passionate Trailblazer
"My dream of Africa started when I was 10," says Dr. Jane Goodall (right, at a Spanish museum in 2018, and inset in Tanzania ca. 1965, with the chimp she named David Greybeard). "Everybody laughed, but Mom said, 'If you really want this . . . you'll find a way.' And I did."

JANE GOODALL

WHAT I KNOW NOW

THE BELOVED CONSERVATIONIST MARKS THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF HER GROUNDBREAKING RESEARCH ON CHIMPANZEES—AND TALKS ABOUT HOW SHE'S STILL FIGHTING TO PROTECT THEM, AND THE PLANET

By K.C. BAKER

For Dr. Jane Goodall, life during lockdown due to COVID-19 has been anything but boring. "I've never been as busy in my entire life," says the 86-year-old animal welfare advocate and ethologist, speaking via Zoom from her home in Bournemouth, on the English coast. "I've been doing Skypes, talking to conferences, writing articles and op-eds. Everybody wants a bit of Jane."

That's partly because this summer the venerable founder of the Jane Goodall Institute—and grandmother of three—celebrates the 60th anniversary of the start of her research in Tanzania. She was just 26 at the time, and traveling with her mother, novelist Vanne Morris Goodall. (In 1960 authorities "wouldn't allow a girl on her own" into Gombe because conflict had broken out in nearby Congo, so "my mom volunteered" to come along. By that time her parents were divorced, but her father, Mortimer, an engineer, fully supported the trip.) Goodall's goal: to study chimpanzees in the wild at the behest of her mentor, anthropologist Louis Leakey. Over the next 26 years, her research—which documented how chimps make tools and have emotions and personalities—transformed the understanding of man's connection to the animal kingdom. "Now we have a different way of thinking about our relationship with all the other animals," says Goodall, whose Institute continues in the Gombe Stream National Park in Tanzania today. Here, she shares what she's learned about work, motherhood, marriage—and the fight for our planet's future.

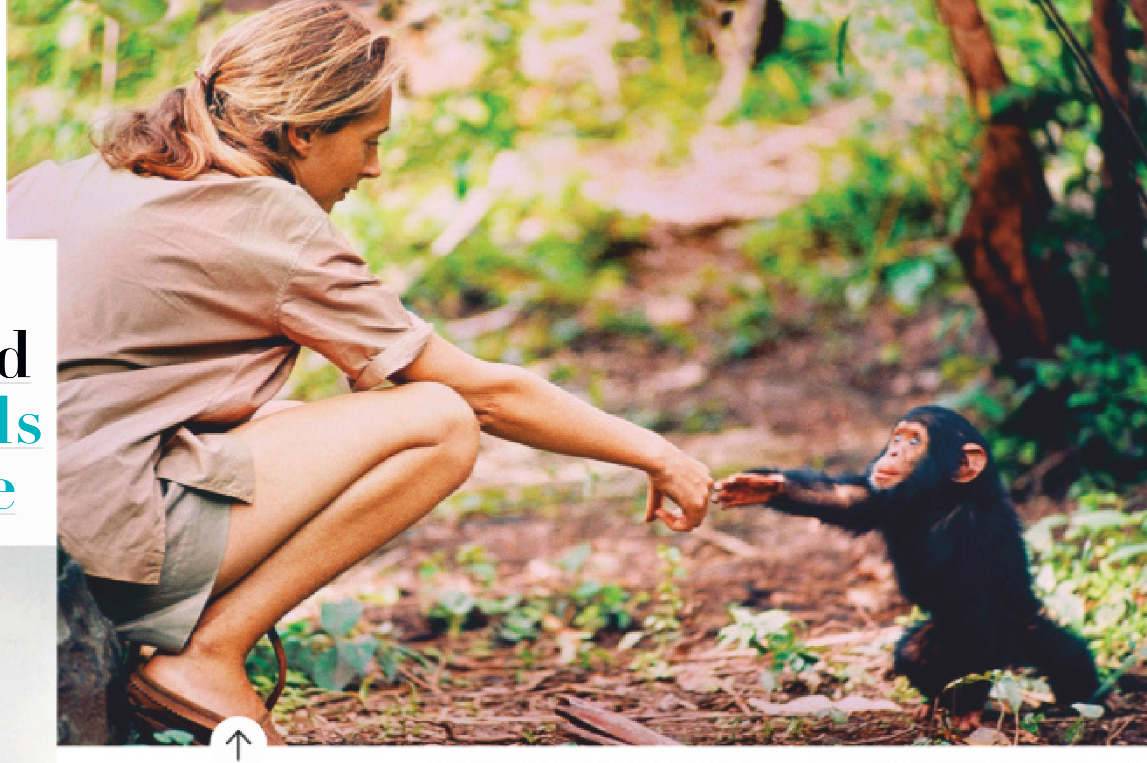
A Life Dedicated to Animals & Nature

Love at First Sight
Goodall, about age 1, with Jubilee, the stuffed chimp her father gave her that sparked her love for the species.

Girl's Best Friend
Goodall's beloved dog Rusty (with her in 1954) "taught me that animals have personalities, minds and emotions," she says.



An Amazing Connection
"I was born with my love of animals," says Goodall (with Flint in Tanzania in 1965).

African Adventure
Goodall (in Tanzania in 1965) recalls wondering, "How on earth am I going to find the chimpanzees in these forests?" when she first arrived.

Courage comes in small moments.
When we first got [to Tanzania]... I was off up the slopes hoping to find some chimpanzees. Mom was left behind with our slightly inebriated cook to let air into our tent. In came air—but also spiders and big snakes and baboons. So there was poor Mom with these male baboons with their big teeth trying to get our food. People say, "Oh, you were brave, Jane." No. I was doing what I'd always wanted to do. She was the brave one.

Search out people who believe in dreams.
My mother tells this story: She came up to my room to say good night [when I was young], and there was a mess of earthworms in my bed. So many mothers would have said throw those dirty things out! Instead of getting mad at the mess I'd made, she just said, "We better take them to the garden because they might die if we leave them here tonight." That is the making of a little scientist—curiosity, asking questions, making a mistake, not giving up, learning patience. [With] a different kind of mother I might not have done what I've done.

Success requires patience.
The first breakthrough I had was after four months. Through my binoculars I saw one of the chimps, David Greybeard, using a piece of grass as a tool to fish for termites, then picking leafy twigs and stripping the leaves. Up until that time it was thought by Western science that humans were the only creatures who could use and make tools.

Sometimes you outgrow a marriage.
National Geographic sent a photographer and filmmaker, Hugo van Lawick, to document what chimps were doing and my life in the forest. Eventually I married him and he was the father of our son. We both love animals. We both loved being in the bush. But [after his assignment ended] we sort of drifted apart. We began to bicker, and I think it was better that we separated. I married again [Derek Bryceson, a former parks director in Tanzania], but that lasted only a year [before] he got this horrible cancer. I didn't want to marry again; I had lots of friends. I didn't need a husband. My life was complete.

Find wisdom in unexpected places.
What I learned from the chimp mothers was what fun they had with

Family Ties
Goodall in 1973 with her first husband, Baron Hugo van Lawick, and their son Hugo, who lives on his mother's compound in Tanzania with his family. "He's very concerned about the future of the planet," says Goodall.

COUNTERCLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT: THE JANE GOODALL INSTITUTE(2); WALT DISNEY TELEVISION/GETTY IMAGES; CBS/GETTY IMAGES; ALAMY

An Enduring Legacy
"We share 98.6 percent of a chimp's DNA," says Goodall (at a Ugandan rescue center in 2018). "They're so like us, you can't miss it."

A Hopeful Future
Goodall (on Martha's Vineyard in 2006 with kids from her Roots & Shoots program) says, "Young people have a motto. '[We all] make some impact every day.'" their infants. So I did a lot with my son Grub [a nickname for Hugo Eric Louis van Lawick, now 53]. I put him up on my feet. I chased him. I was with him all the time for the first three years. People said, "He's going to be so dependent and clingy." But he's very independent. The most important thing in the first two years for a child is to have a supportive relationship with one, two, three adults who are consistently there so there's a feeling of security.

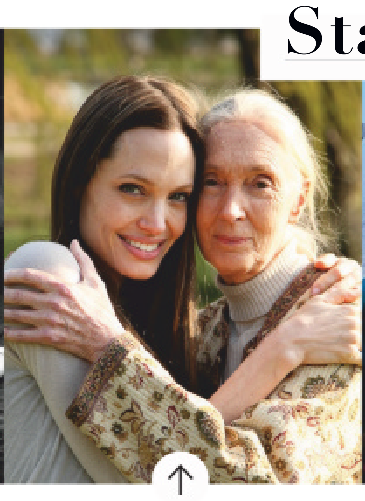
> 'Around the world, people are waking up, and they're ready for change'
> —JANE GOODALL

We must learn from younger generations. When I was traveling 300 days a year [pre-pandemic], everywhere I went there were young people with shining eyes, in education programs like our Roots & Shoots [now in 65 countries], telling "Dr. Jane"—my best name, by the way—what they were doing to make the world a better place. It's not that young people can make change, they are making change. And they influence their parents and their grandparents. There's hope in young people—I see it with my own eyes.

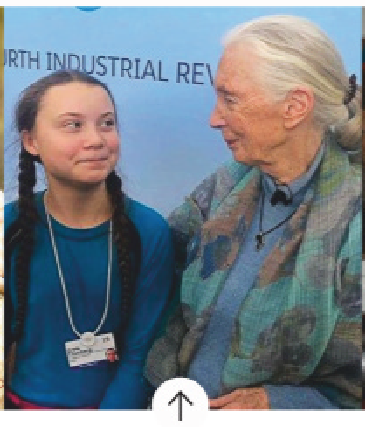
Saving the planet is about our future. We cannot ignore the fact that right now there are 7.8 billion people on the planet. By 2050 there will be nearly 10 billion. Already natural resources in some places [are] being used up faster than nature can replenish. We must confront the climate crisis. Around the world people are waking up, and they're ready for change. I have hope, but only if we [work] together. We still have a window of time. ●

Star Supporters

Royal Fans
"Prince Harry is great, but all this stuff about being best friends is stupid," Goodall (in 2019) laughs. "We've only met three times."



Peace Advocates
"My children look up to Jane," Angelina Jolie has said of the U.N. Messenger of Peace (in 2011).



Generation Next
Greta Thunberg (in 2019 in Switzerland) "has made a big impact" on climate change, says Goodall.

Environmental Allies
"He's a real friend," says Goodall of Leonardo DiCaprio (with the actor in Los Angeles in 2017).

Fellow Legends
Goodall said Muhammad Ali (in 2004 in New York City), also a U.N. Messenger of Peace, "did indeed float like a butterfly."

The Woman Behind the Hottest Game in Hollywood

WE'RE NOT REALLY STRANGERS IS INSPIRING MILLIONS—INCLUDING JADA PINKETT SMITH AND TRACEE ELLIS ROSS—TO CONNECT IN WAYS THEY NEVER IMAGINED By JASON SHEELER

Koreen Odiney still remembers the first time she discovered how much strangers can have in common. She was just 16—and inconsolable after having her heart broken for the first time. "I walked all over Los Angeles asking people if they ever got over their first love," recalls the model turned entrepreneur, now 25, who was struck by how quickly she could identify with people she didn't know. "I fell in love with asking questions. I was hooked."

She's been asking questions—and fostering new and surprising connections between friends and strangers alike—ever since. In 2016 she launched the Instagram feed @werenotreallystrangers, which has almost 2 million followers, many of whom bare their souls daily in the comments. Last year Odiney put 150 of her soul-stirring questions on glossy red cards and turned We're Not Really Strangers (WNRS, pronounced "winners") into a card game designed to inspire new relationships and deepen existing ones (see sidebar). The game has since become a social media sensation, selling some 250,000 (for $30 each) at retailers such as Urban Outfitters. It also boasts a celebrity following that includes Jada Pinkett Smith, Hailey Bieber, Diane von Furstenberg and Penn Badgley, who have been playing on Instagram and FaceTime and asking their friends signature WNRS questions, such as "What are you overthinking right now?" and "Do you think I fall in love too easily?" "I love the game so much," says Tracee Ellis Ross. "You get to have fun and lean in. WNRS

Winning Streak
"Playing the game still helps me have meaningful conversations," says Koreen Odiney (at her office in Hollywood).

Odiney appeared on Jada Pinkett Smith's show Red Table Talk in November 2019 and partnered with Pinkett Smith on a special pack of cards.

How to Play the Game

The directions for playing We're Not Really Strangers come with a caveat: Warning: Feelings may arise. Two to six players make their way through three levels of questions: Perception ("What was your first impression of me?"), Connection ("What lesson took you the longest to unlearn?") and Reflection ("How would you describe me to a stranger?"). Along the way there are wild cards—including 30 seconds of eye contact. In honor of the Black Lives Matter protests, Odiney added a free expansion pack: a PDF of 25 questions to initiate conversations about racism and privilege. Says Odiney: "You win the game by growing."

is a game about connecting—something that feels tough to do in a pandemic."

For Odiney, making emotional connections was, at times, challenging. She and her single mom, Merav Agig, 49, emigrated from Israel to Los Angeles when she was just 5. "My mom spoke Hebrew at home," recalls Odiney, who admits she often felt like an outsider growing up. As a teenager her insecurities gave way to depression—"an untraceable sadness that wouldn't go away," says Odiney, who later struggled with anxiety. "I had a lot of fear, like, 'Oh my God, I'm feeling happy, but what if the other shoe drops?'" Talking to a therapist and friends helped—but it wasn't until she began posting questions to her Instagram feed, asking others if they felt the same way, that she began to find real comfort. "I knew I wasn't alone," she says.

Following high school she began work as a model after a scout stopped her in a West Hollywood Starbucks, took her picture and signed her. For the next five years, she worked successfully for companies such as Lucky Brand and Glossier—but never felt fulfilled. "I couldn't stop thinking, 'I have nothing to show for my life so far,'" says Odiney, who got the idea for WNRS in a Los Angeles park where—once again—a conversation with a stranger changed her life. "He told me his passions are Jesus and Israel. And I'm from Israel. It was just like this interesting thing. And at the end he told me that I would write a book called We're Not Really Strangers." Inspired by the name, she began thinking of ways to empower people by asking questions and developed her plan to "game-ify meaningful connections."

These days Odiney, who lives in L.A. with her boyfriend of three years, fellow entrepreneur Chris Pfaff, 33, is growing her WNRS platform, with branded merchandise (hoodies and T-shirts featuring her now-signature questions) and plans for a video version of the game. "It took me a long time to find my voice," she says. "Now I get to ask someone a question, hear their answer and then say, 'I feel the same way.'" ●

Circle of Trust
"My mom always encouraged me to ask a lot of questions," says Odiney (with her mother, Merav Agig). Right: With boyfriend Chris Pfaff at an L.A. arcade.

What My Life's Really Like

THE OSCAR WINNER, NOW ADDING SHOES AND MAKEUP TO HER LABEL, REVEALS HER INSPIRATIONS—AND HER LOVE FOR GAME NIGHT By JACKIE FIELDS

Like everyone, I'm at home a lot now… My husband [Michael Douglas] and I were empty nesters, but now [because of COVID-19] it's been wonderful to be back under one roof with my son [Dylan, 19] and daughter [Carys, 17]. We just hunkered in and got out the cards, Monopoly, Yahtzee and Skyjo.

I'm a creature of routine… I get up really early. That's my favorite time because I have a little peace and tranquility. I like to exercise in the morning to get it over with but have to eat before I think about it. I go through phases of being really disciplined, and just meh, but when I do, I like to swim or tap dance. After I get my New York stuff done, business-wise, I have lunch with my husband. Then I read and close my eyes for a few minutes. By then, L.A. has opened up, so I do those calls. And somewhere in there I try to watch the news and do the New York Times crossword.

I love to draw and design… I've got pieces from Carnaby Street in London that I've kept in storage since I was 18 years old. My husband calls me a high-class hoarder because he doesn't realize that stuff is archival for me. With all that travel and history, I wanted to create a line that incorporates my favorite passions. Casa Zeta-Jones puts it all under one umbrella, from the ultimate mascara to the perfect ballet pump. I need a creative outlet when I'm not acting.

I'm not a big party fan… So we won't be doing anything big for our 20th anniversary [Nov. 18]. But I will raise my mask and let my husband passionately kiss me. Then I will put it firmly back on. ●

ANNA FRANCESE GASS

Grilled Avocado with Corn & Mango Salsa

'No grill? No problem!' says the chef and author of the Heirloom Kitchen cookbook. 'Both the corn and avocado can be made in a grill pan or cast iron skillet on the stove'

- 4 firm ripe avocados, halved lengthwise
- 3 tsp. toasted sesame oil, divided
- 2 tsp. kosher salt, divided
- 2 ears fresh corn, husks removed
- 1 firm ripe mango, peeled and diced
- 1 medium-size red bell pepper, finely chopped
- 1 small jalapeño, seeded and diced
- ¼ cup fresh orange juice (from 1 medium-size orange)
- 2 Tbsp. fresh lime juice (from 1 lime)
- ¼ cup finely chopped fresh cilantro
- ½ cup toasted macadamia nuts, chopped (optional)

1. Preheat grill to medium (350° to 400°). Brush cut side of avocados evenly with 1 teaspoon of the sesame oil; sprinkle evenly with ¾ teaspoon of the salt. Brush corn evenly with 1 teaspoon of the oil, and sprinkle evenly with ¼ teaspoon of the salt.

2. Place corn on oiled grates, and grill, uncovered, until slightly charred, about 15 minutes, turning occasionally. Remove from grill. Place avocado halves, cut side down, on grates, and grill, uncovered, 2 minutes. Rotate avocado halves 90 degrees, and grill until crosshatch grill marks appear, about 2 more minutes. Remove from grill.

3. Cut grilled corn kernels from cobs, and place in a large bowl; discard cobs. Add mango, bell pepper, jalapeño, orange juice, lime juice, cilantro and remaining 1 teaspoon each oil and salt; stir to combine.

4. Place avocado halves on plates, and spoon salsa evenly on top. If desired, sprinkle with chopped macadamia nuts.

Serves: 4 Active time: 25 minutes
Total time: 25 minutes

quick tip!

'This recipe also makes a killer tropical guacamole,' says Gass. Scoop out the grilled avocado, and mash with a fork. Add the corn-mango salsa, and mix to combine.

Reprising their roles as lifelong best friends Lee Flynn and Elle Evans, Joel Courtney and Joey King are back for Netflix's The Kissing Booth 2, streaming July 24. The pals navigate their senior year of high school, applying to their dream college together—and dealing with the challenges of Elle's romance with Lee's older brother. "So many fan favorites are back," King told People. "You can expect a lot of crazy things to happen."

RICKY MIDDLESWORTH

Last time I danced
Gosh, it was about two years ago. We were at a party at a country club and decided to get up and not fall down. My wife, Doria, is a really good dancer. Once in a while we get really close and dirty.

Last time I was starstruck
Probably when I saw Shirley MacLaine in Malibu. She was walking, and I just stared and didn't say anything. I'm such a fan—but I'm an idiot.

Last thing I took from a set
I usually try to keep a piece of wardrobe. The other stuff you just think, "What am I going to do with this?" I do have one of Zeek's jackets. I wear it all the time.

Last time I was recognized
I was in the store, and I had on dark glasses and a mask, and I get "Hey, I love your show." I get recognized by my voice. It's a gift that you're reaching people.

Last honey-do chore
Walking the dog. Our mission here is to make sure that our golden retriever, who is now 13, enjoys the last stages of his life. We golf together; he always wants to be around me. It's just really important to extend that same love you've been given.
